Free STD testing inspires controversy

By Tiffany Roney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Planned Parenthood's free STD tests, offered throughout the month of April, have sparked controversy on college campuses. The "Get Yourself Tested" program, which is backed by MTV, is marketed toward teenagers and college students with the line, "Because getting tested is simple, safe and sexy."

While GYT associates said they look forward to providing their "sexy" service, K-State students have varied opinions toward the program – from complete support to worried disdain.

"I think it's definitely good for people to get tested for STDs because you need to know what's going on with your body, because it could potentially lead to even worse situations," said Jessica Busey, freshman in textile and apparel marketing.

"It's just the responsible thing to do. If you're going to be having sex, then you need to be using protection and being responsible about it, and I just feel like it's the right thing to do. It's respectful to yourself."

Cody Kalivoda, junior in civil engineering, also cited the topics of health and self-care, but took the opposite stance.

"I think it definitely promotes sex outside of marriage, which isn't good," Kalivoda said. "The program sort of condones it – that it's OK to have sex – and that isn't healthy. Even if it's 'safe' sex, it can still be a damage to your emotional life if it's outside of marriage."

Daniel Spachek, junior in open option and vice president of Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators, said he is in full support of GYT.

"There's a certain amount of knowledge you need to be a responsible adult, and I think that's one of them," Spachek said. "I mean, it's a college campus – a lot of the people here are sexually active – but a lot of the beliefs around STDs are just that it can't happen to you."

"Most people believe that an STD always has symptoms, but it doesn't always, necessarily. People just don't know what's going on in their relationships," he said.

Christie Coffman, junior in fine arts, said she had mixed feelings about the program.

"It's mostly just a sadness that this is the cultural norm these days, because it didn't use to be," Coffman said. "I know that most-

Wefalds honored for support of K-State theater

An evening filled with classics from the likes of Sondheim and Rogers and Hammerstein became a musical tribute to President Jon Wefald and his wife Ruth Ann's many contributions to the development of arts programs at K-State.

Fellow patrons, friends and university supporters gathered at the Manhattan Country Club on Friday to thank the Wefalds for their support of the K-State theater and dance programs.

"You ushered in the golden age of the arts at Kansas State," said Kate Anderson, K-State director of theater, thanking the Wefalds for their 23 years of support.

Anderson, associate professor of theater, accompanied Richard Coleman, founder of the K-State Theater Guild, in presenting the Wefalds with a specially commissioned original Ralph Fontenot painting. The gift depicted Nichols Hall adorned by a banner advertising the performance of "Romeo and Juliet."

The evening's entertainment was provided by Miles Phillips, K-State theater department alumnus. He performed his acclaimed cabaret act "Reappearing In My Mind," which recently premiered at Feinstein's in New York. Phillips is an award-winning actor, director, nightclub vocalist and recording artist. He was accompanied by William Wingfield, K-State staff accompanist, who played the piano and sang banter-filled back-up vocals.

Linda Uthoff, drama teacher at Manhattan High School and K-State alumna, joined Phillips and Wingfield in a three-part harmony for Sondheim's "Another Hundred Elegants," a song immortalized in the mainstream by Paul McCartney.

Several graduates from across the country even returned for the event to pay homage to the Wefalds' benefaction.

"With [the Wefalds], it was always more than just handshaking," said Price Messick, a 2006 graduate of the theater program. "I am back because I am extremely grateful. The Wefalds have always demonstrated a genuine interest in us students," he said.

Lifelong patrons of the arts, the president and his wife met at a musical while at the University of Michigan, Jon Wefald said. The president's original date for the musical had become ill before the performance, and he decided to attend the production alone. He said Ruth Ann's date for the evening had been called away and left at inter-

Students plan Life Week events to educate

By Jacie Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Students for the Right to Life will present Life Week today through Friday. Life Week will feature events throughout the week that raise awareness and provide information about anti-abortion issues the group focuses on.

Students for the Right to Life President Jennifer Wellnitz said the four main issues the group focuses on include abortion, embryonic stem cell research, the death penalty and euthanasia.

"A lot of students don't know the facts and don't work on becoming educated on the life issues," said Wellnitz, senior in animal sciences and industry. "We want to get the facts out about the four main issues and also get the word out about our organization."

The group has scheduled one event per day, starting today with a showing of "Juno" at 7 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Room 212. The director and founder of the Abortion Recovery Center in Topeka, Kay Lyn Carlson, is scheduled to speak Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Union Big 12 Room. Carlson had an abortion at 17 and is now a social worker who assists women throughout the nation who have had abortions.

Booths will be set up from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday with information and displays on campus. Members will be available to talk and answer questions. On Friday, group members will create the annual

Annual 4/20 observance aims for more legalization

By Sophie Siemion
THE OLYMPIC COLLEGE OLYMPIAN

The number 4/20 has represented cannabis culture for more than 30 years. But where did it come from, and has it always been related to marijuana?

The answer comes from a group of high school boys in San Rafael, Calif., in 1971. Every day at 4:20 p.m., they would meet at a statue of chemist Louis Pasteur on their campus. At first they used the time to follow a map in search of an abandoned pot patch.

As time passed, the boys found use in “4/20” as not only a time to light up, but also as a code around parents, cops and teachers. They had no idea their code would become an internationally accepted term for marijuana users.

“It’s a way for this persecuted culture to talk to each other and not to be exposed,” said Steven Hager, editor-in-chief of High Times magazine, in an interview with ABC News in 2002.

In addition to being a reference to getting high on the date or time of day, 4/20 has also taken a place in mainstream society.

The 4/20 Campaign is now a term that describes groups and actions around the country involving the legalization of marijuana. According to an article published in High Times magazine, “We want to use April 20 as a focal point every year to concentrate pressure on Congress to legalize marijuana until we get the job done.”

“I think that we need to study why these things are happening, and why is there so much violence in our culture.”

The pros and cons of marijuana have been debated for years.

The largest marijuana policy reform organization in the U.S. is the Marijuana Policy Project. Its goals are to make marijuana available for medical uses and also as a legally taxed and regulated substance. The organization’s activities include supporting legalization, lobbying Congress to approve medical marijuana and recruiting celebrities for support.

Proponents say the legalization movement is not just about the right to smoke, but also wanting to work to make environmental and medical improvements.

The use of hemp as a replacement for items made out of petrochemicals could potentially lower pollution, and using marijuana as a medicine could be successful, according to supporters.

Another group fighting for legalization of marijuana is the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. It focuses on the fact that marijuana is currently the largest cash crop in the United States. NORML contends that if marijuana was added to the U.S. economy as a legal cash crop, state deficits would be resolved and raising taxes would be unnecessary.

While most nations consider the drug an illegal narcotic, its consumption, distribution, harvesting and selling occur around the world.

Despite the fact that 4/20 is celebrating an illegal drug, it is still considered a holiday by millions. And on 4/20, those millions gather around the world to celebrate not only the use of marijuana, but also the positive impact they say they believe it will have on the world.

To celebrate 4/20, Olympic College student Marcus Gause said he planned to “leave early from work, and hit the ATM machine up.”

Postcards deliver ‘creative’ lyrics, new sounds

By Gloria Funcheon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 50 people crowded around circular tables at Bluestem Bistro to listen to this charming, quirky trio perform at 8 p.m. Saturday. This soft-spoken group of Hornsby, bassist John Goddard, freshman in English, and percussionist Kristin Henry, freshman in environmental design, played a 90-minute set of acoustic music with primarily folk influences.

“I picked the playlist based on what would sound best in conjunction with the espresso machine,” joked Dan Hornsby, freshman in English and singer-guitarist of local band The Postcards.

The Postcards opened the show with a cover of The Arcade Fire’s “Rebellion (lies),” driven by Henry’s drum beat and Hornsby’s crisp, articulate vocals. After playing a few more covers from North Carolina band the Avett Brothers and Death Cab for Cutie, Hornsby played several original solo pieces.

Between songs, Hornsby kept the audience engaged through story-telling and ironic impersonations of melancholic indie rock musician Connor Oberst of Bright Eyes.

“One of the best things to come out of Nebraska,” Hornsby said in reference to Oberst.

Audience members laughed in appreciation of Hornsby’s offbeat humor.

“Dan shows that it’s OK to be a little weird,” said Nick Istas, senior in humanities.

Musically, the Postcards distinguishes itself through the group’s lyrics. This difference is what makes the band so appealing to some concertgoers.

“The Postcards have a softer feel, and they are not so big on sounding corporate,” said Zach Beach, freshman in kinesiology.

Barbara Braga, freshman in chemical engineering, said she enjoyed the inclusion of Shakespearean sonnets in song lyrics.

The Postcards also differentiates itself through the use of multiple instruments. At this performance, Henry played drums, melodica, egg shakers and trumpet. She said her primary musical influences are jazz and Eastern European folk-flavored band Beirut, both of which place heavy emphasis on the trumpet.

By experimenting with old sounds in new ways, the Postcards shows it does not fear stretching its musical limits.

“They are really creative,” Istas said, “and not afraid to step outside of established boundaries.”

The Postcards said bands are able to perform at Bluestem because of the supportive staff.

“I love promoting local bands; it really helps them out,” said Steve Keck, junior in psychology and barista at Bluestem.

Student radio also helps increase listenership in local music. Amber Johnson, K-State alumna, said she decided to listen to the Postcards at Bluestem because she recently heard about them on KSDB-FM 91.9.

Regardless of how people find out about the Postcards, listeners can rely on them for clean, catchy melodies and well-developed lyrics, Johnson said.

“You can always expect to hear something nice and original from them,” Istas said.

‘Poet in a Box’ booth offers impromptu memories

STEVEN MILLER

When I arrive for my shift in the box, the whole building is swarming with activity — students move among a sea of cardboard tri-folds. Most of the table set-ups are for viewing, but ours is for hiding behind.

Katie Achey, graduate student in English, and Michael Donnelly, associate professor of English, are already set up in the box and writing diligently. Across from us, maybe 15 feet away, a black and white rat is running a tightrope back-and-forth like a true performer.

“So we aren’t the oddballs of today’s events,” I say to Katie.

“At least not the oddest ones,” she replies. “Come get your very own poem written by our poet in a box!” shouts Naomi Wood, associate professor of English, across the teeming crowd. “See if you can stump them!”

“It can’t be done!” Katie adds, sounding more like a carny than anyone so far.

As much like a carnival as this looks, we’re actually participating in K-State’s annual Open House, and all the animals and rides are legal and licensed. At least, I assume they are.

The box functions like this: Curious open-house-goers write their poem ideas along with their names on a small slip of paper and then slide it into the “in” slot in our box. We then take the idea, work on a poem on our scrap paper and then compose it legibly on the back of the slip. Ideas range from “soccer” and “K-State” to “subatomic particles” and “Donald Duck, hinges, stale banana fritters,” and everything in between.

When we finish a poem, we slide it out the “out” slot and start making beeping noises. “Beep, beep, banana fritters.” Occasionally, Katie adds a “Bahh” like a sheep-poet-robot. The people on the other side, I imagine, are completely bewildered the entire time.

The fourth wall is broken, of course, by people who come in the door behind us or peek their heads around the tri-fold barrier. Not long after I sit down, I’m reminded of this unfortunate reality by a poem idea: “IHOP. I know you!” When I’m not writing poetry out of a box, I’m flipping pancakes and burning bacon. While I prefer the box, it still has its work-like-moments, times when poem ideas are falling through the “in” slot faster than we can come up with a rhyme for “dog.”

Often the slips are never claimed. We have delivered them into the world, yet those who wanted them are nowhere to be found. Some are about love, others about Silly String, but here they are all about abandonment.

“Someone will claim them,” Naomi assures me, but I know she’s lying, telling me what I need to hear so I do not lose my faith in humanity. In all likelihood, they will end up as wards of the English department, hardly even given a second read.

My personal favorite sits at the front of the pack, silently weeping (maybe I’m imagining this part) and waiting for Kevin to find him and read the poem tucked into his fold: “Don’t worry about the money/ if you do your job won’t be funny/ Take it from a boxed-up poet/ there’s more to work for than it!”

A satisfied recipient holds up a poem that a “Poet in a Box” wrote for him Saturday at Open House.

One girl asks for something epic, and so I summarize Homer in six lines, ending with Odysseus reclining in the back of an El Cami-no. Some want robots, some want puppies, and no matter what they need, we supply them with a relevant verse, and a little hope, I think.

“All in a day’s work,” I say and dust my hands off as we officially close the box. I can’t help looking out at all those lonely poems. I’d like to think the ones that did make it to their owners also made it to their owners’ houses where they could rest comfortably on the mantle or flap from the front of the refrigerator. I know the statistics aren’t good for impromptu poems, but I’d like to believe they all found happy places to live.

Get the most out of ‘trashy’ Earth Day activities

BEN CHAMPION

Have you ever gone Dumpster diving? I’m not necessarily recommending that you try, but it does offer a window into our habits. The first time I ever tried it was as an undergraduate here at K-State – in the middle of the quad, no less. Some of my friends and I spent all afternoon in front of students walking by on their way to class, sifting through a week’s worth of trash from Durland Hall. We were trying to determine how much of campus trash was recyclable. The answer is almost exactly two-thirds. It was shocking to see the huge piles of sorted recycling next to a much smaller pile of genuine trash.

That was nine years ago – the first organized activity of Students for Environmental Action and the campus’ first Earth Day event. The following Earth Day, we organized a major celebration at City Park, which featured games, an appearance by the first Toyota Prius hybrid in Manhattan, live local music and a recycling fashion show.

Earth Day is once again upon us, as this Wednesday is the annual day set aside to celebrate our connection to Earth. There will be a whole host of creative activities from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday in Bosco Student Plaza for people to celebrate Earth Day and learn about environmental issues and “going green.” The events were organized by a number of student organizations collaborating with each other. They’ll have a trash mountain, fishing for recyclables, a T-shirt exchange (bring your extra T-shirts to exchange for ones you like), music and more. There might even be a plastic-bag monster – you’ll have to show up to figure that one out.

These events are very important for campus life because they provide a chance to laugh and have fun, and they help us learn more about the issues K-State faces and how various people in our community are involved. It’s a reason to talk about the fact that two-thirds of campus trash is recyclable, but only 10 percent is recycled with our current program.

Lowering the annual $15 million energy bill and using energy on campus more efficiently could save us a couple million dollars. We can talk about how these dependencies are related to the news we hear about ecosystem degradation around the globe, planetary destabilizations in store through climate change and concerns about the sustainability of our livelihoods in the face of such challenges.

The university is a special place. Not only do we get to take time to learn together about these relationships and become part of an engaged community, but we also come to prepare ourselves for the future. K-State’s sustainability efforts are not just about increasing recycling and saving energy on campus; they are about preparing students for the careers and society they will face after graduation. In a world encountering limits in almost every dimension, students who graduate from K-State need to be prepared to use natural resources more effectively and to make sure that scarcity does not lead to desperation.

No one person or group has the answers when it comes to sustainability. After all, it’s a conversation more than it is a list of issues. So, I hope to talk with many of you on Wednesday as we continue that conversation.

Ben Champion is the director of sustainability at K-State. He is a 2002 K-State graduate and a Rhodes Scholar. Please send comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Banning books results in harmful censorship

MOLLY HAMM

What do Khaled Hosseini’s “The Kite Runner” and the “Gossip Girl” book series have in common? Besides being wildly popular reading materials that have been transferred to the visual screen, they are also two of the American Library Association’s top-10 most frequently challenged books of 2008. These books are often challenged because of their offensive language, sexually explicit passages and because they are considered unsuitable for the age group they’re marketed to.

A challenge to a book is defined by the ALA as “a formal, written complaint, filed with a library or school, requesting that materials be removed or restricted because of content or appropriateness.” While the ALA recorded 513 challenges in 2008, it estimates that only one in five challenges that occur are actually reported and accounted for.

As college students, we might think we are safe from censorship and book-banning because of the free-thought mentality that pervades the university atmosphere. While we might not have books removed from our own reading lists in the classroom, book challenges affect us in a number of ways. We are certainly all part of a community – in Manhattan, in our hometown and wherever we choose to move in the future – and public libraries are valuable assets to these communities.

Those who challenge books particularly enjoy focusing on libraries in hopes of controlling a book’s ability to reach a wide audience. The ALA noted that 74 books were pulled from shelves as a result of challenges in the past year.

Censorship of reading materials will affect our children at their schools, and it might already be affecting our siblings, cousins and neighbors. In 2005, the Blue Valley [Kan.] school district board members were faced with a challenge of Toni Morrison’s Pulitzer Prize-winning novel “Beloved.” Though the board voted 6-1 to keep the book in the curriculum, an article archived on KMBC-TV’s Web site notes that “one board member said that this isn’t the first time a controversial book has been before the board and it will not be the last.” In fact, “Beloved” was one of 14 books that were being petitioned by citizens in the district to be replaced by “higher-quality literature.”

The topic of book censorship came up in a class discussion in my teaching methods class last week, and our professor talked to us about a school that had removed an entire story from a literature anthology because of its controversial nature. Interestingly enough, book challenges often have an end result that is the exact opposite of their intention – they make the books even more in demand than before they were challenged. And this is exactly what happened when students at this school learned that a story was missing from their textbook.

Books are banned when people feel threatened by the ideas inherent within them. If people believe their values are threatened by the contents of one book, they try to dictate what is appropriate for public consumption. If a book is being challenged, it is probably standing for an unpopular truth. As Judith Krug, founder of Banned Books Week, often said, “Censorship dies in the light of day.” So in honor of the good ideas that face opposition each year, go out and shed light on them by reading a frequently challenged book soon.

TO THE POINT

4/20 celebrations should be kept safe, courteous for other students

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

If you're sitting in class today and haven't noticed anyone who is giggling at every move your instructor makes, analyzing the complexity of a mechanical pencil or eating a bag of Crunchy Cheetos like it is a last meal, then you probably are that person.

April 20 has for many years been the unofficial holiday for those who smoke marijuana to light up and chill out, and campus will undoubtedly be filled with students celebrating.

Almost universally known as 4/20, the holiday was created by a group of California teenagers in 1971 and has since snowballed into a nationwide cannabis celebration.

If you choose to celebrate, please be safe. And if you decide to venture from your friend's couch or your bean-bag chair to go to class, be smart – don't drive, take a nap in a crosswalk or break into a vending machine.

If you go to class today after celebrating, keep fellow students in mind: Keep the giggles to a minimum, avoid lengthy philosophical debates with your teacher, and don't make a scene when you wake up in the wrong class.

If you decide not to toke up, feel free to enjoy the holiday as well. You can stay sober on 4/20 and spend your day watching all the students who aren't. After all, who wants to learn about pre-industrialized Europe or differential equations when you could be watching someone next to you, wearing a poncho, eating M&Ms and trying to figure out where exactly he or she is?

Team stumbles against Tigers, loses 2 of 3

By Blake Thorson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Heading into a series against the Missouri Tigers, Brad Hill's squad was turning heads in the Big 12 Conference. But the youth of Hill's team, a factor that many believed would be the Achilles' heel of the club, was present at Tointon Family Stadium this weekend as the Wildcats dropped two of three games to the Tigers.

In Friday's series opener, it seemed as though the Wildcats would extend their four-game losing streak as they received yet another stellar performance from junior pitcher A.J. Morris. Morris, who came into the series leading the nation with nine wins, threw eight scoreless innings before giving up consecutive base hits.

Missouri outfielder Aaron Seene led off the inning with a double to right center field, followed by an infield single off Morris' glove by outfielder Greg Folgia.

"I think [Morris] competed extremely well. But it's the same thing with him in the ninth inning, he got the slider up and they just hit him," said head coach Brad Hill.

Following a mound visit by Hill, sophomore Thomas Rooke was called in from the bullpen. Rooke, who has been dependable for most of the season, came in to face catcher Trevor Coleman. Rooke was able to keep Coleman off balance with the use of off-speed pitches, working the count to 2-2. Then Rooke left a change-up out over the plate, and Coleman powered a home run over the left-field fence, scoring himself and two others.

The three-run blast was followed by a solo home run by Kyle Mach to give the Tigers a sudden 4-2 lead, silencing the 3,008 fans in attendance.

"We made some mistakes," Hill said. "We made some good pitches early on Coleman and we just didn't get that last one down — it stayed up and he handled it. It's just one of those things. [Rooke] usually doesn't make those mistakes but he did tonight."

The Wildcats were able to respond with some noise of their own. Four consecutive singles produced a run for the Wildcats, cutting the Tiger lead to one run. Yet a failed squeeze attempt by Adam Muenster resulted in the second out of the inning. Muenster then grounded out to second base, ending the game.

"I thought we had a lot of competitive at-bats; we put ourselves in a spot to maybe win that ball game, but we just came up one short," Hill said.

Hill said he felt his team would come out ready to compete for the second game. After two innings Saturday, it seemed his prediction was coming true as the Wildcats jumped out to a quick 5-0 lead.

Yet the pitching staff was unable to keep the lead as K-State gave up 10 free bases throughout the game through walks and hit batters. Missouri's offense came alive in the fourth inning as the Tigers scored five runs on three hits and won 11-6.

"That was a key factor," Hill said of the walks. "Any time you have more runs than hits, there is probably something not going right with [your pitchers] throwing strikes."

The Wildcats were able to avoid a sweep on Sunday as they took advantage of five errors committed by the Tigers. The Wildcats offense came alive as K-State defeated Missouri, 11-5. K-State recorded 10 hits and scored in seven of the eight innings they headed to the plate.

With one win in the series, the No. 21 Wildcats improved to 29-11 overall and 8-7 in the Big 12. While the Wildcats did lose the series to Missouri, they remained in a three-way tie for fourth place in the Big 12.

"That's the way this conference is," said first baseman Justin Bloxom. "Playing in the Big 12, it's a tough conference — one of the best in the country. That's just the way it falls. Sometime you have a bad weekend, sometimes stuff doesn't go your way and you just have to bounce back."

K-State returns to action Friday as the Wildcats travel to Austin, Texas, to face the No. 9 Texas Longhorns in a weekend series to face the Big 12 leaders.

The K-State rowing team chalked up another weekend of racing in the Southern Intercollegiate Rowing Association Championship Saturday and Sunday. The Wildcats' first day of competition advanced two boats into grand finals and their final day of racing brought home a gold and bronze from Oak Ridge, Tenn.

K-State's most notable performances Saturday came in the first Novice and first Varsity 8+ races, earning spots in their respective grand finals. The Varsity 8+ won its heat in 6:42.90, besting crews from Purdue, Kansas, Alabama, Oklahoma and Jacksonville.

In Sunday's races, K-State's second Novice 8+ came out on top with a gold medal. Their performance was followed by the first Novice event in which the Wildcats claimed the bronze. The first Varsity 8+ missed the podium by a narrow margin of two seats, a disappointing finish after posting Saturday's top time.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said the novice teams brought in good results for the Wildcats despite not putting together the crew's best race. He added that the group is strong but lacks consistency.

The Wildcats will take to the water again on May 2 for the Big 12 Conference Championship on Wyandotte County Lake near Wyandotte, Kan.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Wildcats finish regular season

Staff Report
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team closed out the regular season with a 14th-place finish at the Lady Buckeye Invitational Sunday. The Wildcats carded a 972 overall despite adverse conditions throughout much of the weekend.

Junior Morgan Moon rallied to shoot 18 over for the tournament and pace the Cats with a 26th-place finish. Moon sat in 44th place heading into the final round of action, but was able to jump nearly 20 spots in the standings.

"Morgan's play was a bright spot in this tournament and I am happy for her," said head coach Kristi Knight. "She had a solid day on a course that was playing tough."

Fellow Wildcat junior Abbi Sunner finished just six strokes back from Moon to take 48th place. Rounding out the K-State line-up was Elise Houtz in 69th place, Ami Storey in 73rd and Paige Osterloo in 78th.

Ohio State's In Hong Lim took the overall title to help lead the Buckeyes to a first-place finish as a team. Lim, who shot one over par for the tournament, edged Laura Kueny of Michigan State by a single stroke for the individual title.

The Buckeyes as a team had a stranglehold on the lead throughout the entire weekend and finished ten strokes ahead of second place Kent State. The victory marks the 12th year in a row that Ohio State has won the Lady Buckeye Invitational.

The next action for K-State will be Friday in the Big 12 Championship at the Rawls Course in Lubbock, Texas.

TRACK

Squad earns qualifying marks at 3 weekend meets

By Justin Nutter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the 2009 outdoor campaign, the K-State track and field team has been all over the country. It was another busy outing for the Wildcats Friday and Saturday, as they sent representatives to three different meets for the second consecutive weekend.

The Wildcats enjoyed arguably their most impressive showing at the LSU Combined Event in Baton Rouge, La. Freshman Mantas Silkauskas earned K-State's first provisional qualifying mark, winning the decathlon with a score of 7,414. The product of Lithuania bested the field by 435 points while finishing in the top two in eight out of 10 events. Senior Adam Fretwell also competed in the decathlon and finished fourth with 6,152 points.

In women's competition, junior Stephanie Hejde earned a third-place finish in the heptathlon with a score of 4,514. Hejde finished in the top three in three events.

K-State was also solid in the 82nd-annual Kansas Relays, hosted by in-state rival Kansas, earning five regional qualifying marks and an event title at the three-day meet.

Senior Mike Myer, who has been solid throughout the outdoor season, led the Wildcats with two regional marks. Myer posted a pair of second-place finishes — one in the 200-meter with a time of 21.29 seconds and another in the 100-meter with a time of 10.55 seconds.

Sophomore Ali Pistora earned K-State's only title at the meet, winning the javelin with a throw of 160-1. The toss exceeded her previous career high and earned her a regional mark. In the men's javelin, freshman Cory Boulanger also tallied a regional mark, finishing seventh with a throw of 202-9.

Sophomore Emmanuel Neizer earned a mark while recording a new personal best in the triple jump. The California native finished third with a leap of 49-11.

Junior Beverly Ramos traveled to Walnut, Calif., as K-State's lone representative in the 51st annual Mt. SAC Relays. Ramos, who competed in her first ever 10,000-meter, earned a regional mark, finishing seventh with a time of 33:51.44.

The Wildcats will continue action this week with two meets — the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, on Thursday and the Nebraska Open in Lincoln, Neb., on Sunday.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

K-State drops last 2 regular season matches in Wamego

By Steve Berklund
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State tennis team's regular season came to a close this weekend as the Wildcats lost matches to two ranked Big 12 Conference opponents at the Wamego Recreation Complex.

K-State (4-14, 1-10 Big 12) came into the weekend matches looking to win consecutive matches for the first time this season.

The No. 35 Texas A&M Aggies and the No. 32 Texas Longhorns proved to be too much as they handed the Wildcats a pair of losses to end the conference season.

The first match of the weekend featured the Aggies winning all three doubles matches to win the doubles point as Texas A&M (13-9, 9-2 Big 12) went on to win 5-2 on Saturday. The two Wildcats to get on the scoreboard for the Wildcats were Nina Sertic and Natasha Vieira. Sertic won at the No. 3 position, winning 6-1, 7-6, (10-8), while Vieira at the No. 6 position won 6-1, 6-2.

Head tennis coach Steve Bietau said he thought his team played well in the singles matches against Texas A&M.

"We were pretty average in the doubles, but outstanding in the singles," Bietau said. "Nina [Sertic] played extremely well, and Natasha [Vieira] won easily, which is quite an accomplishment. I think we had a good performance, but I would have liked to have seen better doubles [play]."

After losing to the Aggies, the Wildcats then lost to No. 32 Texas (14-6, 10-1 Big 12) on Sunday, falling 6-1 to the Longhorns.

The Wildcats were blanked in doubles matches again, as only one Wildcat got on the scoreboard. Winning at the No. 2 position for the Wildcats was Mariya Slupska, winning 3-6, 6-4, 10-7.

Bietau said the doubles teams' play was not what he was hoping for, but said one player did play well during singles play.

"I think we could have done better in the doubles; it wasn't a bad performance but it also wasn't a performance that moved us up," Bietau said. "There was a great win for Mariya [Slupska] at No. 2 against Texas, and I thought that was her best singles match of the year."

After going 1-10 in conference play this season, the Wildcats will enter the Big 12 tournament with the 12 seed and their opponent has yet to be decided.

The Wildcats will play either Nebraska or Texas Tech, as their match earlier this season has been rescheduled for Wednesday morning. The winner of the Wednesday match is scheduled to play K-State in the first round of the tournament in Norman, Okla.

mission. The future couple happened to be sitting alone near one another for the second act. Wefald said he and Ruth Ann were both in an English history class that particular semester and the president remembered thinking, “Why I am just now noticing this girl?”

Ruth Ann Wefald said because the pair’s paths first crossed in theater, she said it was fitting to keep the arts in mind as they retire.

Anderson said there is now an unofficial system of reference when referring to K-State: “Before-The-Wefalds” – BTW; and “After-the-Wefalds” – ATW.

Anderson, holding back tears, quoted William Shakespeare in her final words of thanks: “We will not see the likes of you again.”

ly the people that disagree [with GYT] are Christians, and so I’m just kind of torn between knowing that it is probably a necessity because of our culture these days, but just wishing that it didn’t have to be that way.

“Obviously, the easiest way to stop problems like that would be abstinence, but I understand that that’s not a common thing in our culture, which is just upsetting,” she said.

Area centers participating in GYT include Brouss Health Center in Kansas City, Mo., Hays Health Center in Hays, Kan., and Wichita Health Center in Wichita. Medical professionals there test for gonorrhea, chlamydia, syphilis and HIV. For information, visit www.gyt09.org.
